

ABSTRACT

A computer network or system for providing services that are controlled by email messages comprising a plurality of computing elements each of which has computing resources for supporting one or more services and a redirector, communicatively connected to each of the computing elements and configured to serve as an email proxy for the computing elements, where the services are controlled by email messages routed by the redirector among the computing elements.